Foundation for Religious Action
In the Social and Civil Order

1. BACKGROUND. The problem of our time is complex and manysided. It is easy to say that Communism is the great issue of our day. But a full statement of this problem must include not only the many facets of insidious appeal which Communism has, but also an evaluation of our own reaction to the threat which it represents to our civilization and way of life.

To the extent that Communism menaces us by its military, political, economic, psychological, and conspiratorial methods and activities, the United States and its allies have developed resources of defense and containment. People may differ as to the adequacy of our countermeasures, but at least we have finally faced up to the issue.

In one great area, however, we have both underestimated the Communist appeal and have failed sufficiently to mobilize our resources for a more powerful appeal. This is the area of ideology; the satisfaction of the ideals, aspirations, and hopes of many millions of mankind. In the minds of far too many people, Communism has virtually preempted such terms as peace, democracy, freedom, reform, progress, and economic deliverance. The free nations of the West have been tarred as warmongers, imperialists, exploiters, materialists, and exponents of a decadent civilization.

The impact of this ideological offensive in large sections of Western Europe, Latin America, Africa, and Asia is tremendous. It is probably as effective, in its total force, as the more tangible forces against which we have mobilized. Yet the nations of the free world, our own included, have done little in the battle for men's minds. Not only are we losing in this field, but we are also suffering political, military, and economic losses because of our failure to win the allegiance of many neutralist nations or groups.

2. THE FOUNDATION. To meet the crisis of our time, an ideological and spiritual counteroffensive is needed. For this purpose, the Foundation for Religious Action in the Social and Civil Order was founded as a means of uniting the religious-minded people of America, irrespective of specific creed or denomination, in a constructive program of opposition to Communism and of affirmation of the ideas of true Democracy.

The purpose of the Foundation may be stated in the following terms, quoted from the articles of incorporation:

The particular objects of this corporation shall be to do and perform every lawful act necessary and incident to be done and performed in furtherance of uniting all people who believe in a Supreme Being into a movement having as the avowed aim and purpose the promotion of confidence of people everywhere in religious truth as the prime support of human freedom; of promoting and encouraging resistance to all attempts which may tend to destroy confidence in religion, or which may aim at enslaving the minds to the forces bent on the destruction of religion; and of having every participant in this movement endeavor to make religious truth an effective force for the promotion of ordered freedom and the common good in every nation and in the family of nations; and employing every legitimate educational and informational means of carrying out the aims of purposes herein enumerated.

3. AREAS OF OPERATION. In the United States, we seek to revive in our people an awareness of the spiritual foundations of our democracy. We stress the importance of religion in social and civil affairs. At the same time we interpret the true nature of world Communism, as primarily a design for winning and enslaving the minds of men. This perverse aim must be countered by a vigorous crusade, based on the primacy of God and the reality of man's creation in the Divine image, and expressing itself in clear convictions with respect to the moral law, the dignity of man, freedom in society, and an orderly economic system which affords material support to the family and the higher achievements of man's culture, without falling into the errors of statism and collectivism.

Outside our borders we seek to enlist the support of all believers in God in a common crusade against the tyranny of atheistic and inhuman Communism and for the ideals derived from belief in God and in the rights and dignity of man, and from confident determination to progress toward ever higher degrees of political and economic emancipation. Thus we would seek to win an allegiance which is being rapidly lost because of the effectiveness of Communist propaganda and our own blindness to the transcendent importance of the war for men's minds.

4. METHODS OF OPERATION. To achieve these aims, certain steps will be taken progressively, as ability, resources, and experience permit. Among these are:

(1) A national conference on the spiritual foundations of our democracy, to be held in Washington in November, 1954. This will lead to follow-up efforts to combat secularism and moral anarchy in our nation.

(2) Lecture, radio, and television programs to explain the real nature of the Communist threat, to further spiritual ideals in our democracy, and to enlist support for a worldwide effort.

(3) Preparation of literature in order to influence members and others in accord with the ideals of the Foundation. As a start, a biweekly bulletin is planned, which will emphasize the real nature of Communism, persecution of religion behind the Iron Curtain, and the operation of religious ideals in civic and social life.

In addition to direct distribution, such literature will be sent to the editors of Church papers, selected secular dailies, and the more important weekly newspapers, to radio and television commentators; and to columnists. It will also be made available to libraries and schools.

Ultimately literature will be prepared for worldwide distribution, employing the services of a research staff.

(4) Making initial contact with religious leaders and religiously inclined lay leaders in other lands, in the effort to bring them more closely together in a common cause of preserving freedom and fighting the ideological threat of Communism.

(5) Steps to encourage daily prayer for God's help in bringing about peace and the restoration of freedom to hundreds of millions under Communist slavery.

(6) Efforts to seek support of and membership in the Foundation, with appeals both to Church groups and to individuals.

Thus we would operate in an area which is of the highest importance, yet which cannot be the object of government action or propaganda. We would seek to strengthen and unite the free world, as the Crusade for Freedom strives to implant the ideas of freedom behind the Iron Curtain. We would also hope to influence Americans to oppose Communism for the right reasons and to support a crusade which would capture the ideological initiative too often held by Communists today,

There will follow, on the last page of the printed brochure, the following sentence:

BELIEVING in the necessity of action now for God, for Country, and for Human Liberty, I wish to become a member of the FOUNDATION FOR RELIGIOUS ACTION IN THE SOCIAL AND CIVIL ORDER and to have a part in a spiritual and ideological offensive for true Democracy and against Communism.

On a fly-leaf of the brochure, the following will be reprinted:

FOUNDATION AIMS

1. To stress the importance of religious truth in the preservation and development of genuine Democracy.
2. To unite all believers in God in the struggle between the free world and atheistic Communism which aims to destroy both religion and liberty.
